Extract from "Architects' Journal," July, 1905.

"IRONITE."

ONE of the most durable of pavement materials is that known as "Ironite." Traffic, however heavy, makes no impression on it; some we have examined that has been down for more than two years in cartway, dray docks, etc., shows absolutely no sign of wear, and the surface is even and true as the day it was put down. Bluestone cube sets laid at the same time and subject to the same amount of traffic, already show a surface so uneven that it is, or will be shortly, necessary to reset them.

Besides being adapted to all the requirements of the heaviest traffic, it is claimed by the inventors that it is infinitely superior to slate for treads, copings, hearths and nosing. If durability is to be the test—and we know of no other—their claim is certainly justified by the sample we have seen. Not samples, be it remembered, prepared for an architect's inspection, but the actual work that has withstood the severest test imposed upon it, in doing the work for which it is designed. Prices and particulars in regard to "Ironite" may be obtained from the manufacturers, W. H. HUGHES & Co., 31 Queen Victoria Markets, George St.
