An Uniquely Complete Organization.

Department for the Collection of Outstanding Accounts.

It has always been the aim of the Merchants and Traders Association to extend, as far as possible, the scope and usefulness of this department, and no subject has been more prominently before the management since the inauguration of the Association than that of perfecting a system for the collection of overdue and doubtful accounts.

When an account is past due and payment has been refused, there is always a time, and a proper time, when the merchant or trader must know what to do, and not guess at what should be done, if payment is to be enforced. It is important to ascertain particulars in regard to the debtor's resources, character and other details which the Association, in the ordinary conduct of its business is well able to acquire, thereby placing it in a position to determine intelligently whether it is safe to extend time or not.

It is pleasing to record a large increase in the number of members who have availed themselves of the facilities afforded by this department, and the scale by which its operations can be measured is the scale of results. During the year under review the substantial sum of £64,344 has been collected, as against £60,251 recovered during the previous year, showing an increase of £4,093.

Indeed the system introduced by the Association has been subjected to severe practical test for several consecutive years, and, measured by results, it has proved beyond all question a pronounced success, as is shown by the following figures. The amount collected during the year ending
